

Rising delinquency among young children, is an issue being faced today in all parts of the world. Young Children do not have a sense of differentiating between right and wrong, and deprived of proper upbringing and opportunities they deviate towards juvenility. Their behaviour is largely influenced by parents, teachers, and peers. This poem reflects the importance of all in the Society, in guiding a child's behaviour in preventing Juvenility.

Guiding Lights: Society's Hand in Shaping Youth

In shadows cast by youthful nights,
A soul drifts far from guiding lights.
The streets, they whisper tales of woe,
Where dreams are lost, and sorrows grow.

Yet in the heart of every stray,
A flicker burns, a hope to stay.
Not born in darkness, nor in sin,
But led astray by life's harsh spin.

Society, with tender grace,
Can help the lost, the young embrace.
With hands that lift and hearts that care,
We weave a future, just and fair.

A mentor's voice, a teacher's hand,
A neighbour's warmth, a friend's command.
In these small acts, we find our might,
To turn the dark towards the light.

For every child deserves a chance,
To learn, to grow, to laugh, to dance.
No path too crooked to amend,
When love and guidance we extend.

So let us build a world anew,
Where dreams are nurtured, skies are blue.
Together, strong, we'll shape their fate,
And guide them through to heaven's gate.

In every youth, potential blooms,
Amidst the trials, amidst the glooms.
Society, rise to the call,
And catch the ones who dare to fall.

In shadows deep, where hope seems slight,
We are the spark that brings the light.
A future bright, a promise kept,
For every tear that's ever wept.

So let us pledge, both heart and mind,
To lift the lost, the blind to find.
For in our care, the young shall see,
The boundless path to what can be.
