High serum bilirubin levels (jaundice) can typically be caused by infections or obstructions in the hepatobiliary system. Infections are usually associated with increases in the AST and ALT enzymes whereas obstructive pathology is associated with increased levels of alkaline phosphatase. Raised gamma-GT is associated with induction by specific substances like some drugs, alcohol, etc. In addition, toxicity due to several drugs (antituberculars, salins, anti-epileptics, immunosuppressants, etc.) can also cause raised levels of liver enzymes.

Obstacles are not only the building blocks of our body but also carriers of major enzymes, hormones and medicinal substances in the blood stream. A significant decrease in total protein concentration arises from a low albumin which may be due to dietary deficiency, decreased synthesis or decreased immune response. A significant increase in total proteins is due to globulin increasing in excess as in multiple myeloma.
